The Danish Immigration Service (DIS) reviews the case of a Syrian refugee from Damascus, Reef Dimashq, Latakia, or Tartous who was granted residency and temporary protection due to “generalized violence” in Syria.

DIS reviews residency

Refer to the Refugee Appeals Board (RAB), a body that takes a final decision

Revocation assessment

The person is obliged to leave Danish territory and has three options

- Return “voluntarily” to Syria (cannot be deported because Denmark does not have diplomatic ties with Damascus)
- Go to a third country (EU countries may send this person back to Denmark under the Dublin Regulation)
- Live in a “return” center with prison-like conditions indefinitely

New information on the case arises or the existent information was not properly assessed

The case may be reopened and sent back to the Refugee Appeals Board (of second instance)

Continue to live, work, and study in Denmark

DIS reviews residency

What happens when Denmark reconsiders the status of Syrians from areas deemed 'safe' for return?

The Danish Limbo